More Than 70,000 Killed in Yemen's Civil War: Database Tracker

10,000 estimated killed in just the past five months Posted on April 19, 2019April 19, 2019Categories NewsTags Saudi Arabia, Yemen

Official figures on the deaths in the Yemen War have been virtually unavailable, or at least years out of date. The database tracker from the Armed Conflict and Location Event Data Project, however, issued their own data on Yemen Thursday, showing more than 70,000 have been killed in Yemen just since January 2016.

This is a huge amount of deaths, and if there is some decrease in fighting in Hodeidah because of UN talks, it's not like the war is slowing much. At least 10,000 people were killed just in the past five months.

The decline in Hodeidah was made up for by substantial increases in fighting in Taiz and Hajjah. Stopping the fighting in Hodeidah was still important, since it prevented a famine that could've killed even more people, but the combatants have largely just started fighting elsewhere.

The database included 3,155 direct attacks targeting civilians, with more than 7,000 civilians killed. Unsurprisingly, the vast majority of the civilians were killed by the Saudi-led coalition, at least 4,800, while the Houthis killed about 1,300 civilians
