Jeff J Brown: Good to hear from you, James.

James: Man, the audience is lucky. Jeff is known for having lived in China and for his knowledge about the country. And let's dive into Jeff's past experience. Some may know that Jeff spent time in Africa, and here is a map of Africa after the Berlin Conference of 1884.

And on the center-left it puts French West Africa. Although there are border lines, there is a large portion that was called French West Africa.

And now, today we are going to talk of a country in the news, Niger. And it's so fascinating to see that I've been scanning US coverage and you wouldn't know something is going on. So, I think it's a great thrill that we have JB Brown, who has Experience in the field. It's in France. And the question I have is, shall we to restore French West Africa, Jeff? Do we return to the nineteenth century?

Jeff: Thank you, James. Yes, this is incredible. Of course, being a former French colony and some would say that They are still French colonies because they are still financial colonies. But yes, I have traveled to most of these West African countries and it's an amazing thing. It's absolutely amazing what's going on. It is a tectonic shift in the Western imperialism and Africa, and so on. Last week, a Nigerien and I we had to point people out where Nigeria is, which is a huge country of He speaks English on the west coast of Africa. And then tell them where Niger is, which is the landlocked country I'm talking about right now.

So, we say Niger, Niger, and then Nigeria, Nigerian. So, that's the way to tell them apart. Like this that, anyway, Niger soldiers took over the country last week They overthrew President Bazoum. Immediately, the African Union of Western influence denounced the coup and gave them 15 days to withdraw or face punitive measures. And then ECOWAS, the Economic Community of West African states also issued their ultimatum and said that if they do not withdraw, would take all necessary measures to restore constitutional order, including the use of force.

Of course, ECOWAS is a Western prostitution organization. And they immediately blocked Niger with sanctions and cut off all trade with ECOWAS... But in less than 24 hours, James, neighboring Mali and Burkina Faso condemned the sanctions announced by ECOWAS on Saturday as, · illegal, illegitimate and inhumane·. They also expressed their fraternal solidarity with the Nigerien people who have decided to take their destiny into their own hands and assume the fullness of their sovereignty in the face of history.

Subsequently the Board The military in Niger accused France of threatening military intervention and then, Mali and Burkina Faso issued a statement saying that if Niger is attacked militarily by ECOWAS or France or by anyone, it would be considered an act of war. for Mali and Burkina Faso; then the neighbor Guinea west of Mali said that we too will join Niger and we will fight for Niger if they are attacked. I mean, this is simply incredible. And then the presidents of Mali and the president of Niger said we have to Unite. We have to unite sub-Saharan Africa.

We have been colonies for a long time 150 years. And we need to join forces and become a federation of States. Of course, this is something that Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi is talking about. he always spoke: to unify Africa into a consolidated whole. And so, this is amazing. And the fact that Burkina Faso and Mali have successfully expelled the French Army. I would also like to point out that the deposed President Bazoum of Niger is nothing more than a Parisian puppet prostitute. And this is what happens.

France, since the end of the Second World War, does not deny [its influence] on liberation movements in Africa. In fact, France does not even he even denies having assassinated 22 African heads of state like the Burkinabé Thomas Sankara and many others who fought against imperialism western. Here's what happens. They will try to enter now and destroy this military junta and put another ventriloquist dummy that will deliver the country to France.; but now Niger has a military council. They are working with Mali and Burkina Faso.

I'll put up a map so people can see this. And then, in the statement, Niger said it would adopt self-defense measures in support of the armed forces and the people of Niger. A military intervention against Niger could destabilize the entire region, as could NATO's unilateral intervention in Libya, which was at the origin of the spread of terrorism and the Sahel and West Africa. The Sahel is basically the Sahara desert region. I would like to point out that France currently has 1500 soldiers and a drone base in Niger, while the US has 1100 soldiers and two drone bases in Niger. And both have been told not to abandon their bases.

James: Can I jump?

Jeff: Yes, go ahead.

James: I've never been there and for That's what I'm asking. But something that interested me and that could be wrong by a couple of percentages; Niger is producing 30% of the uranium for France. France is completely electrified and 80% of Niger has no electricity. It is also a population young. Most of the population is under 35 years of age in Niger and they're waking up and they're seeing the electricity of France at the Eiffel Tower. And my dad and I and my mom don't have electricity here. And we are giving our uranium and our gold to France. And then it's also at the top of one of the best aquifers in the world. So, gold, water and uranium could be one reason why France wants to spread a bit of democracy.

Jeff: Yes, absolutely the so-called democracy, the right to plunder and plunder. Yes, this is momentous. And as you mentioned, Niger immediately, as soon as the junta arrived at the power, banned exports of uranium to France and the United States, not to Russia, not to China, but to France and the United States. And I have a great quote from someone who was at the protests outside the French embassy in Niamey, the capital of Niger. And he said, as James says,

"We have uranium, diamonds, gold, oil and we live like slaves. We don't need the French to keep us safe."

James: But that in terms of 200, 300 years of African history, this is almost like and I don't know how to tell if I'm a storyteller from Africa, this is a perfect story. They don't have electricity and, However, they are turning on the lights. They are images and facts that could sell themselves to the most illiterate and uneducated person. I can understand that, that I have no electricity and you feed off the things under my feet. I mean, I would fight for this. This is very understandable and obvious and is not being covered by Western media. The facts we just covered Until now. It is very difficult to find this in the Western media.

Jeff: It is being covered in a way more obvious in France because they can't help it.

James: No, but I mean geopolitical. There was a coup d'état. The name of this type.. the military. Is Very hard to find. Hey, we're providing 30% of your electricity And you're us without electricity. And we have gold and we have water. Those Such basic facts are not reported on the BBC. You know what I mean?

Jeff: That's for sure. Yes. Those Statistics can be found on alternative news sites. In addition, the the fact that a French company controls about two-thirds of the Niger's uranium production. And, of course, everything goes to France at very high prices. Reduced.

James: Scandalous.

Jeff: The President of Niger newly "liberated" in the 1960s he went to Paris and said he wanted to. Negotiate a better price. Of course, France wanted free uranium. And it was to Paris and complained and said he wanted a better deal. France told him that Fuck it, we're going to steal the uranium. He went to the UN and made a complaint formal. And, you know, the following week There was a military coup and he was deposed, and a Parisian puppet was put in his place.

So, this is something we need to do. take into account. This is not over. The West is going to use its box of Imperial tools. They have murders, blackmail, bribes, extortion, Fake news, fake flags. And the right to pillage and plunder. Then This is by no means over. The good news is that Russia and Africa, and I'm sure James knows about this, it was, again, a very, very soft in the Western press. Russia and Africa have just concluded a very successful in St. Petersburg. Forty-nine of the 54 countries represented.

And this was despite the tremendous pressure and threats from Washington, London and Paris not to go. And I think it is telling that the ambassador of Guinea, one of the four countries that now is ready to go to war to support the liberation of Niger, the ambassador of Guinea wore a T-shirt with a mosaic of photographs of Putin instead of a dress shirt. . And Burkina Faso's leader, Ibrahim Traoré, invokes the memory of assassinated communist leader Thomas Sankara, who was president of 1983 to 1987.

He wore combat uniform. when he shook Putin's hand in St. Petersburg. And they call it the new Thomas Sankara, the communist leader in Burkina Faso, who led from 1983 to 1987. He built more schools, hospitals, public housing, and roads on his four short years than what France did in 150 years of rape colonial and plunder in West Africa. West Africans they're waking up and I think some of that has to do with Emmanuel Macron. be the president of France and go visit these people and invite them people to France.

He is hated. He is irresponsible. He is arrogant. He is bigger than you, better than you. Bothers to everyone he knows. And I think it's been a little bit of a catalyst for the Africans say: at least people like Jacques Chirac and Francois Mitterrand They showed a modicum of respect and diplomacy, and so on. But Macron, is a son of such an arrogant whore. I think it has a lot of them. Then, from Anyway, Russia has a very good angle here, because the Soviet era was glorious for Africans and also for China, North Korea and Cuba.

They played an essential role in the liberation of the African continent from Western imperialism. Therefore, So much so Africans in St. Petersburg did not forget who helped them versus who kept them as a resource and as financial slaves. And that's France. That's Paris, London and the United States. And now they're starting to wake up and I think it's wonderful. There are 85 million people in those four countries Guinea, Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger. And as James pointed out, they have gold. They have gems. They're growing cotton, uranium.

They have a lot of cotton. Niger is actually an oil exporter. They have oil. And so, these are times exciting. What's going to be interesting is to see what's going to happen now. Just before James and I went on the air, I saw a headline that read, "U.S. US: A Small Chance to Reverse Niger Coup While the ousted president meets with the leader of Chad." Chad is to the east of Niger, it also has a lot of uranium and gold and so on and also a colony Frenchwoman. And Niger has now arrested 130 members of the deposed president's party, including four cabinet officials. So, they're really following the steps of Burkina Faso. And that's what's going to be needed if they're going to survive this.

James: It is very interesting that The United States has an army there to help, in quotation marks, help Niger and that China has no army there. And they look at the horrors of the Americans and look with pleasure to China.

Jeff: Yes, absolutely. The first thing Niger has to do is expel these French troops and The U.S. and let Russia cooperate to manage those three U.S. bases. Drones. It can be done because last year Mali evicted its troops The U.S. and French and Niger have already reentered troops French and American women in their country who do not abandon their bases. So, in They actually need to follow the model of Burkina Faso.

I showed James some clips on Twitter before entering the program. And its leader, Ibrahim Traoré, he obviously learned from Mao Zedong that liberation can only happen with the barrel of a gun. And I think he also learned from Ho Chi Minh that no one, is In other words, neither France nor the United States can defeat a people's war. And I think that another thing they should do, if they haven't already, is contact the Ministry of State Security of China and the FSB of Russia.

Those are their offices of intelligence. Cuba would be happy to help. They have an excellent system of intelligence. They would be there in a jiffy, if Niger would call them, with its services and intelligence could keep track of what France, London and Washington will try to do to overthrow his movement. Venezuela uses Cuba for its intelligence support, and that's why the West doesn't It can overthrow the Venezuelan government. And they have already approached the Central African Republic. (RCA).

I mean, for Chad, We saw that there is a photo from just three days ago after the meeting, after the Overthrow, the leader of the President of Niger met with the leader of the Chad. And both, together with the Central African Republic, are working on the hand in hand with Russia and Wagner. Chad and RCA have a chip on their shoulders against France. We see that you can have this idea of staying together, in unity, It will be very, very difficult.

As "America sees a small chance to reverse the coup in Niger when the president overthrown meet with the leader of Chad", we see that it is strength in numbers. To the just like Ho Chi Minh's People's War. If people are struggling, they don't You can defeat them. And on the other hand, I think Niger could also get closer to North Korea, Eritrea, Venezuela, Cuba, Iran and other countries anti-imperialists to learn about self-sufficiency and the defense of Homeland, because all have resisted being invaded by the West and the NATO.

They should be kept close to Russia and China should continue to work with Wagner, the Russian private army, which is now basically a nationalized public army for Russia. And Wagner it is widely represented in sub-Saharan Africa. This is the last thing. And this It is a kind of chimera. But the last big play is that not only these countries, but the 17 West African countries finally managed to get rid of of the CFA franc, Charles de Gaulle was not stupid.

He gave these countries a flag and its political independence, but maintained its colonial status by impose on them the CFA franc, which is issued by the Bank of France, controlled by the Banque de France and manipulated by the Banque de France. They keep the type of extremely overvalued exchange rate which makes it very difficult for these countries to export, and forces them to import almost everything they need from France, because using your CFA is overrated and I think of a possibility. And they need get together, just do it and say we're going to start using Chinese RMB, the Chinese yuan.

I don't know how that could happen. but that is one of the reasons why France bombed Libya until leaving it in oblivion in 2011, it was because Gaddafi wanted to create an African dinar backed by gold, which would have completely destroyed the CFA franc. Then that would be the last death sentence for France in West Africa, if Guinea, Mali, Burkina Faso, Niger, the Central African Republic and Chad could unite and send the devil to the CFA franc and the Bank of France. , that would be a Global tectonic change as great as the establishment of a BRICS Buck backed by gold. That's all I have, James.

James: Well, what's the Next step? We're supposed to worry about aggressive China and the Aggressive Russia. And here is a nice France that eats croissants and that it could bomb Africa. I mean, what right do they have to get involved at all? Are they going to bomb? I mean, if they drop a bomb on Niger, are the other countries going to show up? Are we seeing a problem? potentially big here militarily?

Jeff: Well, if France attacks Niger, Burkina Faso, which cooperates militarily with Russia, Mali also works militarily with the Russians; the Central African Republic works closely with the Russian army. So, they are armed with Russian weapons. What it would be interesting to see is that when and if Niger, and they have to nationalize that company France that controls 25% of its uranium production and sends it to France for almost nothing. They have to nationalize it.

That would be a red line. for France. Are they going to try to go in and bomb? But if Burkina Faso and Mali and Guinea send troops to Niger to fight the French, it's a war Popular, James, as in Vietnam, is a People's War. Suddenly, France already It's not like before, so clean and tidy when they could assassinate a leader and Put a prostitute to rule the country. This would be a people's war and it would cover half of West Africa. And I don't know if France has the guts or the foolishness of doing so.

But they could try. I mean, we'll have to wait and see. But the headline that "States United sees a small opportunity to reverse the coup in Niger when the ousted president meet with Chadian leader," he tells me Probably even the French will realize that they are going to inflate their breasts and beat them like King Kong. . But I think it would be foolish that They will try anything. They might try to do some kind of special operation.

But as I showed you in those Twitter videos, as in Burkina Faso, no one is going to depose the president of Burkina Faso, because it follows the philosophy of Mao Zedong. The revolution and liberation without the barrel of a gun. The country is armed to the teeth and the people back him. I would like to point out that the three countries, Mali and Burkina Faso, and Niger, have closed their borders and controlled strictly access to their countries. So, the only way in that France, the United States or Britain could try to enter these Countries would try to launch special operations by parachute. But the People of the villages and the people of the villages are thoroughly supporting all These military juntas. And I don't think they could get very far, even if If they landed somewhere, people in rural areas would denounce them for immediate. They would not be able to reach the capitals where the leaders are. Then I am actually relatively optimistic that Niger will continue.

Burkina Faso and Mali lead A year kicking out Americans and French. So, it's going to be an autumn and winter interesting and see what happens in Africa, especially now with the Russia-Africa conference, a great summit. And Russia, of course, will rush to take advantage of this situation. And I'm sure China isn't sitting down either. there with flat feet. I'm sure they're getting closer to these countries. And they are also offering their help. So, I'm relatively optimistic, James.

Jaime: It is ok. Can we finish changing the subject?

Jeff: Sure, please do.

James: I would like to say something about a man named Gonzalo Lira. Whether people will search for it on Bitchute or Rumble or something. Gonzalo Lira is a Chilean-American who has been living in Kharkiv, Ukraine, and is one of the four main types I have has been following with regard to Ukraine. And he's a good man. It's very fun very witty and has been giving honest feedback on the situation of Ukraine. Well, he was arrested by the Ukrainian secret police and they discovered that he had some money. They looked at his computer and saw that he had some money. So, they took him prisoner to torture him for days on end.

And finally, when he They put a toothpick in the white of one of the eyes and asked him, only You need an eye, the next day paid. They let him go, but he has to come back with The judge and the judge will find you guilty. Guilty of what? No crime Violent did not hurt anyone. He didn't steal any money. What he did was that he spoke in a way that Ukraine did not like. Jeff Brown and James Bradley have said things much more incendiary than Gonzalo Lira, and he is going to go to a field of I work for seven years.

So, this morning posted a video. It is on the border of Ukraine and Hungary. It's running to Hungary. He hopes he won't be arrested at the border and is going to ask for asylum. No he can go to Europe because Ukraine would publish a full notice for him and France and Germany, all these democracy-loving countries, would arrest him. This It is a crime. Go online, reporters have asked the Department On numerous occasions, why is it not doing anything about it? the U.S. citizen, Gonzalo Lira?

And they won't answer. They don't it matters, because he spoke honestly about Ukraine. I mean, I want to cry. There is a U.S. citizen running towards the border of Hungary Running for safety. He did nothing wrong except exercise the freedom of expression in a country where the United States says it is fighting for democracy. Friends, please support Gonzalo Lira. Look. Make noise, by favor. So, that's James Bradley JB East. And Jeff, thank you for the update on Africa. You're the guy who knows about it. Thanks a lot Jeff.

Jeff: Thank you, goodbye, James
