This violence, which is now in a new flare-up, has characterized the entire history of Palestine from the moment its people were deprived of the sacred right to national self-determination. In this world, immersed in the vertigo of the irreversible decline of the exhausted post-war world order, it is necessary to resolve the question of the formation of the Palestinian state, paying off a debt that is already 75 years old. Without it, violence will only grow and become more and more brutal.
