Twin blasts rocks Khost city, 14 killed or injured

November 23, 2013

At least 14 people including Afghan national army and Afghan national police service members were killed or injure in twin blasts in eastern Khost province of Afghanistan.

The first blast took place on Saturday evening targeting a vehicle of the Afghan national army soldier, killing one Afghan army service member and injuring three others.

Local security officials in Khost province said, another blast took place in the same area which targeted the Afghan national police forces while they were investigating the blast.

The officials further added that 10 people including seven civilians and three Afghan police officers were injured in the second blast.

The injured police officers and civilians are in better health condition, local security officials said.

No group including the Taliban militants has so far claimed responsibility behind the incident.
