Women dead bodies found in southern Oruzgan Province

December 19, 2013

The bodies of two women, who had been strangled with a rope and then were, fired squad, found in Terrinkot city of Oruzgan province, officials reported.

Police believes the women have been killed by the Taliban; however, the killing has not been exactly determined.

Security officials have found out that one of the women was a police officer and the other was a school headmaster in Terrinkot city.

A local security official in Oruzgan said, “According to police investigations these women have been first strangled with a rope and then they were fired squad.”

The official added that due to Taliban fear, the families of the victims had not reported about the missing members.

This comes as a drug-addicted husband sliced nose and lips of his wife on Friday in Heart province and joint the militants in order to have escaped from the law.

The recent media reports indicate increase in violence against women in Afghanistan; however, media experts believe that the increasingly development of media and IT sector in Afghanistan have made the reporting procedure easier and most incidents are reported for media coverage.
